

KURDISH CAMP

URSULA BIEMANN

Camp of seasonal plantation workers in immediate proximity to the BTC Mediterranean terminal Ceyhan. The geographic juxtaposition of the two temporary camps speaks of the different economic strands intersecting here on the social fringe. The pipeline steered clear of the Kurdish areas, but those Kurds who were evicted from their land in the East and from their second home on the edge of Turkish metropolis of Ankara and Istanbul find themselves camping near the terminal now and working for 1 Euro an hour on export vegetables to the European Union. Disowning and continuous displacement strategies have sent them down to the low end of the international labor chain.
